

CAMPERS FILL UNION STATION

Most Are Heading for Vermont Sites

Union Station is in the midst of its seasonal off-to-camp traffic bustle.

For the past two weeks hundreds of children have poured in and out of the terminal, most of them on week ends, most from the New York-New Jersey area, and most bound for camps in Vermont, according to a station official.

Station personnel are generally satisfied about the increased business, with one possible exception. The baggage men are having a hard time keeping up with a flood of trunks, suitcases and, worse yet, bicycles.

They're finding the bikes, which there seem to be more of this year than ever before, bulky items to handle.

Glaciers cover 18,000 square miles of Alaska's total area of 586,400 square miles.

Herb's